This article is a comparison of revolvers, specifically an old single-action .357 magnum Hawes Firearms "Western Marshal" and a double-action .357 magnum Colt Manufacturing "Trooper Mk III." While it may not be exactly "fair" to compare a single-action to a double-action, both are good revolvers with interesting histories, and different enough to provide an entertaining comparison.

HAWES WESTERN MARSHAL - Z27728 - United States

J.P. Sauer & Sohn Western Marshall 357 MAG Made in W. Germany. Imported by Hawes. It is a petty sharp looking piece but a bit odd. I have a few other single actions, but this is the first one with no ejection rod. There are no indications that it ever had one or was meant to. I found a post somewhere that they did manufactured some like this.

I recently inherited a Hawe's Western Marshall .357 revolver. I believe that it was manufactured in the 1960's. It had been in storage for 30 years. By "storage" I mean left in a desk drawer for 30 years. It looked like it had some corrosion/rust but... it was mostly dust old gp residue, etc. I had a spider living in one of the chambers.
